

IS GOOGLE A MONOPOLY?

NO

DOES GOOGLE HAVE MONOPOLY POWER IN ITS MARKET?

NO Google's market share is 29%, nowhere near the Supreme Court's informal monopoly definition of 75% or DOJ's 66%. Google faces all sorts of competition from every angle like:

HAS GOOGLE ABUSED PRESUMED MONOPOLY POWER AND USED ANTICOMPETITIVE PRACTICES?

NO Digital ad prices are down 40% since 2010. Google actually helps competitors like Facebook, Twitter, and Amazon remain free for us all to use. It boosts content providers with small audiences who may struggle to attract paid subscribers and keeps large digital news websites free or mostly free like:

HAS GOOGLE HARMED CONSUMERS?

NO Output is up significantly. And, quality has never been better. In fact, Google continuously strives to innovate more (the sign of a true competitor), budgeting $30 billion dollars to research and development. But the best part? Most of Google's products—Google Search, YouTube, Gmail, Google Drive, and so on—are free for every American.
