NetChoice

The U.S. does not need bigger government to deal with concerns about AI tools. Existing law can protect Americans.

Concerns about harmful behavior from bad actors misusing AI are often already covered by existing law. That means the government can enforce these laws to protect citizens without passing burdensome new regulations.

Here are some examples of possible illegal behavior by bad AI...

...and the areas of government that can already protect Americans:

Bias and Discrimination in hiring, lending, and housing

→

U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission & state-level administrative or banking offices

Bias and discrimination in policing and sentencing

→

U.S. Sentencing Commission

Deceptive marketing and securities information

→

U.S. Securities & Exchange Commission, FTC, & state-level financial regulators

Theft of intellectual property

→

Copyright law & civil lawsuits

Defamation, deepfake images and videos

→

Civil suits & state revenge porn laws